Foreword

The name of William Powell engraved on a shotgun, is accepted as a sign of quality throughout the world.

Established in 1802, the business has been carried on by generation after generation of Powells on the old painstaking lines and by the personal and active participation of the members of the firm in the production of the guns, all built without any possibility of deterioration by resorting to cutting of costs.

In 1953 the company entered the field of Fishing Tackle, and opened a retail shop on the ground floor of their factory in Carrs Lane. Expansion took place in the years that followed, and in 1964 they took over the Fishing Tackle business of Westley Richards & Co. Ltd.

If at any time it is not convenient to call, write or telephone through your requirements and your order will be despatched by return of post. A service, that many clients are already using.

We greatly appreciate the generous support our many clients have afforded us in the past, and know that the quality of our products and service will ensure their continued support..

VICTOR SARESQUETA

Gunmakers to the Royal House of Spain

When Don Victor Sarasqueta makes a shotgun he does it in Royal style.

International honours have been bestowed on the guns he produces, and since 1902 his company has been Gunmaker to the Royal House of Spain.

The barrels are demi-block chopper lump forgings —the most expensive, strongest, most demanding method of manufacture traditionally used for top quality guns.

Attention has been paid to the minutest detail in the fitting of wood to metal and only the best seasoned European walnut and specially selected steels have been used.

The slim, straight hand walnut stocks are made in true English style with hand rubbed oil finish. Each gun is perfectly balanced for quick, precise handling. It's the modern version of the range that has long been the proud possession of the Royal House and is still, today, the most honoured gun in Spain.

THE COMPLETE BOOK OF GAME CONSERVATION

Edited by
CHARLES COLES
Director, The Game Conservancy, Fordingbridge
£6.50

Gamebirds no longer survive as they did ten or twenty years ago. Modern farming—with its machines, chemicals and softwood foresty —has created pressures against which they cannot compete without man's help. This must include the new technology as well as the old crafts and skills. For all concerned with the future of shooting in our shrinking countryside, this book — the result of forty years' research work at Fordingbridge — will be required reading.

The problems of the sportsman who wants to produce more game on his land are likely to include the choice of an incubator, pheasant rearing, wild partridge keepering, warming-up draughty coverts, planting food patches, trapping stoats, and a host of similar practical issues. In addition to discussing such operations in detail, essential game management and breeding techniques are described which will be of interest to the student of wildlife biology and there are sections on wildfowl; grouse and heather management; and the concluding chapters are on shotguns and cartridges.

This comprehensive and practical manual is profusely illustrated with black and white drawings and photographs and colour reproductions of rare prints and original paintings and will make a magnificent present for the shooting man and landowner.

What the Papers say

"After more than two years of use and abuse, I can say unreservedly, that it has given me complete satisfaction and seems to be the answer to my problem—i.e., of keeping warm and dry".

—Stream and Field in Ireland.

"For a day out with the guns, a tramp over the moors in a mist you need protection. We've just found this Barbour Solway Zipper . . . it will stand up to a cloudburst or a blizzard".

—She Magazine.

"The Solway Zipper jacket though strong and well made is lightweight and easy to wear. I did not get the feeling one often has in wet weather clothes, of being in a straightjacket".

—Rod and Line.

"I must confess that driving weather that would starve a coot, when the rain may come down in a solid sheet and hailstorms do their best to slice one in many places, I bless the day I procured a Solway Zipper . . ."

—The Shooting Times & Country Magazine.
